Longtime 1936 on King Edward's home place for the Rockefeller family and the Rockefeller family.

Like other Americans, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., much interested in art, took his young children to see the interesting palace at Versailles, monuments to royal self-indulgence, terminated by the guillotine, and invaluable, historically and artistically.

Mr. Rockefeller observed that palace and grounds were in bad condition, roofs leaking, stone balustrades falling apart, much work and money needed.

Mr. Rockefeller decided to put the whole place in good shape like everybody else connected with standard (D) he has a horror of equipment neglected, you have noticed how freshly his garages and stations are painted, always.

On repairs for Versailles and some other monuments, Mr. Rockefeller spent forty or fifty millions of francs, perhaps more, a considerable amount even when reduced to dollars, but a little compared with philanthropic Rockefeller spending in America.

Mr. Rockefeller rendered service to all civilized nations, American, English, German, Italian, Chinese, Japanese, Russian and others more even than to France. More foreigners than Frenchmen visit Versailles.

Recently Mr. Rockefeller again visited Versailles, to inspect his completed work, not with any desire for thanks. The French government had already bestowed upon him a high decoration in the Legion of Honor, intelligent invention of Napoleon the First that makes it possible to reward merit economically.

But the French government felt that Mr. Rockefeller's exceptional generosity called for some reward more substantial and arranged through the French Arts department to give Mr. Rockefeller a present of a most beautiful little stone chapel, built in the fifteenth century by Charles the Boldheart, Duke of Burgundy, the quarrelsome noble who made the mistake of quarreling with Louis the Eleventh, finally about a battle, which he has read about him in "Queste de Barrois".

The Duke, passionate kind of hunting, possessed a mind preternatural, the Duke of the Duke, that once brought in good Saint Hubert, patron saint of all hunters.

Charles the Boldheart built the little chapel especially for his precious hunting horn, and the relic was kept in that chapel for four hundred years. Thus, in the interesting revolutionary period, it was sold and is now part of the Wallace collection in London.

Intelligent Britain has gathered precious monuments all over the world, from the Egyptian obelisk and Cleopatra's needle down to the queer little book that proves "unconquered" straight-line descent of King Haile Selassie from the King and Queen of Sheba.

The British Museum gave that book back to the Abyssinian people, wishing to be good friends with that ruler, who owned Lake Tana, source of the White Nile that irrigates England's Sudan and Egypt.

Musellini may have the book now, and probably will NOT return it to the British Museum.

Returning to the little chapel, built by the old Duke in honor of Saint Hubert, in the little village of Chauxey-le-Chateau, in the department of La Haute-Saône, the French government, knowing Mr. Rockefeller's appreciation of works of art, decided to give him the chapel, permitting him to take it down piece by piece, carry it home, and re-erect it in America, perhaps on his estate Mr. Tarrytown, more probably near New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art, as a contribution to that institution.

Ten years ago a Parisian art dealer had bought the chapel, then privately owned, planning to transport it to the United States, where some rich man would certainly buy it. The French government heard of that, and took over the chapel, declaring it to be a historical monument, not allowed to leave France.

How much, if anything, Mr. Rockefeller knew about the French government's gift plan is uncertain. The generally accurate newspaper, "Paris Echo,"

Worth Millions

Marblehead, Aug. 1.—A million dollars' worth of racing craft in the harbor here for the opening of Race Week, were endangered today when the Newbury, 25-foot towboat for the international cup defender, Westmore, blew up and showered flaming gasoline.

The roar of the explosion, that burst Captain George Thompson free of the flaming craft, and split the power boat in two, could be heard for more than a mile.

As the flaming bulk of the Newbury, caught in the outgoing tide, drifted toward other craft anchored in the harbor, owners made frantic efforts to swing their boats from its path.

The coast guard patrol boat sped to the scene, hooked onto the burning boat and held it until it had burned to the water's edge with a hiss and cloud of steam.

Capt. Thompson, stunned and his clothes singed by the sheet of flame that burst from the gasoline tank, was picked up by the Sea Eagle, from the Graves bargeyard.

The new barge, 600 feet long and 100 feet wide, was built to replace the old wooden bridge at a cost of $500,000.

Maria Ducey Bride Today in Maine
Of Joseph Ryerson, Jr.

By BETTY ALDEN

THE SILENT lofty interior of a downtown church or the stately home on Beacon street form an excellent setting for elaborate formal weddings during the winter months. . . . But summer is the informal season, and though the weddings are not as impressive and dignified, they are more picturesque and natural. . . . This afternoon, when Maria Ducey and Joseph Ryerson, Jr., murmur their marriage vows in the simple little chapel, St. Mary's-by-the-Sea, in Northeast Harbor, the pounding of the nearby surf, the songs of the birds and other rural sounds, will come through the windows to dispel the usual cloistered silence of a church. . . .

The luscious ocean breeze will take a few moments off its busy workaday task of filling the heavy canvas sails of the yachts in the harbor, to steal through the open doors and windows and ruffle the filmy chiffons and organdies of the ladies' summer costumes. . . .

Maria is wearing her grandmother's wedding gown of heavy cream tulle, with an embroidered satin panel down by her great-grandmother. . . . The gown has a long train, light tulle bodice and square neck. Her tulle veil is held with a wreath of orange blossoms and she is carrying an old fashioned bouquet of orange blossoms and lilies of the valley. . . .

White phlox and gladioli combined with ferns and madonna lilies are to be banked at the altar of the little church and the pews are marked with clusters of white flowers. . . . The Rev. Malcolm Peabody and the Rev. James F. McElroy are officiating at the ceremony, and John F. Ducey, Jr., brother of the bride, is giving her away. . . .

A maid of honor and six bridesmaids precede Maria down the aisle. . . . The maid of honor, Priscilla Pierce of Portsmouth, N. H., attired in an old rose tulle dress made on the same lines as her bride's gown, with a train and tight bodice, a leghorn hat trimmed with contrasting aquamarine velvet ribbon and one large pink rose. . . . Miss Pierce is one of the coming season's debs in Portsmouth. . . . All the bridal attendants are carrying African lilies and wavy slink. . . . The bridesmaids are wearing similar gowns of aquamarine slink with lighon lace also trimmed with velvet ribbon and one large rose. . . . They are the Misses Kathleen Crocker of Pittsburgh; Katharine Munson, future bride of Maria's brother John; Maria C. Bulfinch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. Bulfinch of Philadelphia; and Mary Ryerson, sister of the bridegroom. . . .

Contours of Lips May Be Moulded by Exercises

By DONNA GRACE

WHEN THE mouth and lips are kept in perfect condition, it means that there is at least a good wholesome attraction about the whole face. There are some of our most popular screen stars who have peculiarities about the mouth that only real artistry and cleverness can subdue. . . .

We know of several whose mouths are too large to conform to the usual beauty standards, and yet they appear far more attractive than some whose features are almost perfect. . . . It is easy enough to change the shape of the mouth by making for the stage, but for the screen, the powerful lips do not permit such light deception. The features are portrayed just about as they are, so there is nothing to do but make every feature attractive. . . . I will give you some of the exercises. They are very simple. . . .

First draw the face well with your cleaning cream and remove with a tissue, then apply a face towel to a wall of goose wring out of a hot bath and solution. . . . Leave the face for five minutes, remove and cover the face with a clean cream. . . . Use the soft tips of the fingers for massaging. . . .

By Adele Garrison

CHAPTER 83

AS KATHERINE finished outlining her scheme for insuring the secrecy of our mountain sojourn, she shot a keen glance at me, and I flushed shamefacedly, for I could not control the nervous tremor that was shaking me at the necessity of such secrecy. . . .

"Look here!" she said abruptly and emphatically. "You're all wrong on this. You must think there's any specific or imminent danger to the children that your father or I fear. I'm simply going out of my way—bending over backward as it were—to make sure nobody knows where we're going. . . .

MADGE IS RELIEVED

"I see," I said resolutely, for the knowledge that one of my father's trusted men would be attending my children while they were away had heartened me immeasurably. . . . "I don't want to go to Southampton? Shall I drive you?" . . .

"No, to the second question," she smiled. "Right away, to the first. I shall take my own car, and on the way back I'll have it filled with gas, water and oil, and the battery and tires inspected. . . .

TAKING LEGGER CAR

"The bigger one, the sedan," she returned with the characteristic prompt decision and belief in the sincerity of an offer which she always manifests. . . . "Madge, will you give me some money—about 25 dollars—so that I can hire a car to take me to the Faith? Unless, of course, she has put away the one that her own little girl used to use. . . .

"She has a small daughter, about six years old now, whom I saw last when she was an adorable little thing. . . . I inherited the traits of her parents, she still adorable, brainy, and beautiful. . . .

"I should think you would be proud to have her. . . . I should think you would be proud to have her. . . .

"And lay wreaths on it every anniversary," Mary said. "Boy, oh, boy, how the Florida will bless your name!" . . .

"How much have you in cash?" Katherine countered. . . . "And I have five," she said. "What can you throw into the jackpot, Mary? I can get the check cashed on my way back. . . .

"THE BOY CASTAWAYS" BY JULES VERNE

CHAPTER 24

"Careful of your powder, Donphan," he said. "Careful of your powder!" "Our lunch may be right there!" answered the young hunter. . . . "And our dinner too!" added Service, bending over the burrows. . . .

"If they are," said Wilcox, "we'll get them out without a shot." "How?" asked Webb. "By smoking them out!" Wilcox let some dry leaves at the mouth of the hole. . . .

"They'll make a wonderful roast!" said Gordon. "I'll look after that," said Service, the cook for the trip. "The first time we call a halt," answered Gordon. . . .

In the Dunes

In half an hour they were out of the dense high grass. Beyond the shore was lined with dunes. At 11 o'clock the explorers arrived at the mouth of Dyke Creek. They had covered about six miles. . . .

A hall was called at the foot of a magnificent umbrella pine. A fire was built between two large stones, and two of the rabbits, skinned and cleaned by Service, were roasted. Service did well and they ate a lunch without touching the provisions in their satchels, except the biscuits. . . .

"The shore of the lake became marshy and they went back to the edge of the forest. . . . In the forest, particularly grouse, partridge and pheasants. . . .

"It doesn't make any difference which one we take," I said. "Which one is the better for your purposes?" . . .

"The ground was no longer marshy, so they returned to the shore of the lake, which they reached before 10 o'clock. . . .

"There's the other shore!" All looked towards that side, where the heads of a few trees showed above the water. "We won't stop," said Gordon, "let's try to reach it before night. . . .

"An arid plain dotted with dunes and tufts of willow stretched towards the north. . . . a vast area of sand in great contrast to the green forests of the center. . . .

Explain Common Dreams

DID you ever dream that you found yourself walking up street without enough clothes on?

Such a common dream! It's running through Linda's head now, as she dozes uneasily in the porch chair.

In her dream, people are anxiously looking over a sleeping slumber in her silk, cotton dress. . . . She dozes, looking, takes short naps to nurse back home. . . .

ADVICE on LOVE and MARRIAGE by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Can Young Woman Leave Prison and Hope to Wed Good Man?

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"Fate cursed me, even before I was born," she writes, this South Boston girl whose life reads like a novel entitled: "Bad Breaks—A Serial."

Young women will find this girl's story interesting, their mothers also. That is why, without comment, I give you her letter:

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Mother was an actress, though most of her dramatics were restricted to quarrels with father who didn't have any particular passion or taste.

Mother and father had one common interest, however. Both hated work—especially the daily one. And, incidentally, both worked themselves into the grave trying to avoid work.

My birth meant new responsibilities. Mother and father didn't want responsibilities. The association with work was entirely too close. Neither did mother and father want to live.

Like the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" child, I just grew. Mother, away day and night with her dramatics, my admirers, didn't have time to learn how. Father, by no means the helpful boy with the ladies, was even less interested.

The street was my playground, the playground my home. I was a street child, often my breakfast, and the lack of street children's tastes, I was "society" wise at night, an authority on the most intimate problems of sex.

Prohibition laws, an automobile that wanted all the road, a turkey that also wanted it before Christmas and father. He got under the turkey for a week before going to a publisher's grave. The news reached Mother a month later.

Her own death followed soon. A cold breeze, a knock, and I was alone. That was the story. And I became an orphan. Though the new status made little change in my life.

Mr. Tom's birthday found me in an asylum. My life in the reformatory and the 20th, which I escaped today, free again and facing you. I pursued my own search, looking for a way out of the world, like mine could not expect much from the world.

Sleeping in doorways in winter, standing alone, waiting for a bus to take me to the next day, waiting for a bus to take me to the next day, waiting for a bus to take me to the next day.

People that remember my mother expect me to be like her. There is no one trying to convince them I want to be otherwise. And I feel at home in the reformatory, sticking like glue, doing further out of social behavior.

From now, I place my problem in your hands. Frankly, I don't see how. Will I ever be able to lead a responsible life, marry, and enjoy the pleasures of a home and a family like other women?

MARY D.

MY DEAR MARY:

THE UNITED STATES is a very big country. There are many cities, towns and villages you could not possibly know in a day's journey. I should, therefore, know in a town and you know.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

stay here where Fate has been so unkind.

When you say that I will agree the daughter of parents like yours could not expect much from life, you are assuming too much. I shall agree to no such thing. We, all of us, got out of life only what we put into it, no more.

Did you ever look for a job? Did you ever take the first respectable offer made you? Did you ever give your best to your work, realizing that good efforts lead to good opportunities?

No, dear child. I do not think you did. Father, you kept in doorways and on beaches, following unimagination, the new-fangled theories of your father and mother. You will never be able to picture me that you or any other girl could reach three or four years without finding some kind of honest work.

There are good charitable agencies that will help you temporarily. And they will continue to help you until you have enough to go away and find a job elsewhere.

Make up your mind that you can't stay. And, confidentially, you will learn that you not only can but must.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I'm middle-aged, have a good income, a life job, and am a widower of six years. Have no children. I'm in love with a widow fifteen years younger. She recognizes my love and we've been engaged for a year.

However, she has just told me that she has not told her friends of our engagement because she does not want her friends to know about it for a few more months. She has told me of these and I am in a quandary. If she has to have a variety of men, and if this will continue after our marriage.

I even have told faith in her and wish I could get back the girl I once enjoyed.

MY DEAR FRIEND: C. R.

IT'S A VERY hard job for a man in your position to decide whether an engaged girl who makes dates with other men, is not a temptation to her, or if she is a temptation to her.

At the same time, who naturally like a wide circle of acquaintance. Engagements are not the same. Engagements are supposed to be at one time. One of the most devoted wives and mothers of my acquaintance goes to Women's Club meetings, sometimes goes out on a tour, and goes back to a man with a man friend of some standing.

She is not in the least faithful, but her three wide social circles are the same. It is valuable for her husband's business and her own. I am sure.

You are a man in a position to hand, and I think it is your duty to tell her that you are not in a position to hand her. If she is in a position to hand her, she is in a position to hand her.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Persian-on-Black Suit Is Winner

BLACK continues its swackback way, now creating a furore in autumn fashions. A black nubbed wool suit with childish accents of silky Persian lamb worn immediately acceptance at the Fashion Congress. Slim, young detailing distinguishes it.

Its jacket is the new longer short type, and pocket handings of fur give it the note of precision that daytime costumes favor this season. A vivid red crepe scarf tucks in the round neckline. Off-the-face hats continue, to the delight of those who find them grand for pointing out a pretty hairline, a smooth forehead, and brows like lovely wings. Patent and leather interlace on the open-type oxfords intended for wear with dressy town things. Miss Dorothy Waters models.

When a dress came back from East, a fiasco could be taken, but subsequently nothing could prevent the establishment of dummy's diamonds by one ruff (South's third diamond having been discarded on the King of clubs). Thus there would be no possible need for a second heart finesse.

Knowledge of Avoidable Finesses

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

In a great many hands, analysis discloses that it would be much easier to fulfill a certain contract than to lose it. Indeed in extreme cases it requires great ingenuity to achieve defeat rather than success.

In the hand shown below, most of the key cards were lying exactly where the declarer himself would have chosen to place them and yet he managed, by giving in to his passion for finessing, to "fix" himself.

Acce of clubs. Declarer ruffed and led the Jack of spades.

West covered with the Queen and North's Ace won.

The King of clubs was now

oaked, while declarer discarded

a diamond, after which the ten of hearts was led from dummy and allowed to ride. West winning with the Jack. After cash-ing the King of spades, West returned a diamond. East won and let a heart which declarer again finessed. This time West's black

King grabbed up the setting trick.

How very simple it would have been to make the contract! After ruining the first club, declarer shows the advantage of trying to set up the diamond suit

With only three spades missing, the probability of dummy having two aces in trumps was overwhelming. The best method of assuring communication between the two hands, however, would be to lead a small diamond from declarer's hand and duck in dummy.

"Your Figure, Madame!"

By IDA JEAN KAIN

(Copyright, 1926, Ida Jean Kain, Inc.)

BURNING the candle at both ends doesn't help you to burn calories. Perhaps this upsets your pet theory that lack of sleep makes you thin. The little sleep shows you down the road. Inertia sets in. You economize on energy, at all you can, slump into poor posture habits, and let your figure go.

It takes lots of energy to follow a reducing program, to exercise, and even to stand correctly. Energy is, in fact, the backbone of reducing, which is the main reason tired or lazy people never get slim.

Speaking of normal sleep, it is the world's greatest little builder of will-power, and reducing is a matter of will. If you have fractured your will-power by carrying a heavy burden of weight, help it along with a regular eight-hour rest.

Need of Beauty Sleep

Adequate sleep is essential to the success of a paing, reducing or beauty program. We know of beauty-wise women who are "not at home" to friends or telephone calls while they are catching up on sleep. They realize that fresh complexion and sparkling eyes do not go with continued late hours.

The movie players understand the importance of sleep to success, and while working on pictures they seldom make social engagements. They plan, when they play, but sleep when they work, and we don't mean on the job. Once, when asked her favorite recreation, the hard-working Miss Garbo is said to have replied: "Sleep."

You can make up for an occasional loss of sleep but the habit of going without the sleep you need will break down your health and beauty. The average person over 18 needs eight hours' sleep, many require nine. An adult weight person needs more than the average number of hours, since an abundance of sleep is necessary in the storage of vitality.

We occasionally hear of someone who goes along in five hours' sleep a night and who believes that more sleep makes her dull. However, this person usually is the kind who manages to make up for short hours. The people who do their best work on little sleep are few and far between.

Amount Varies

Find the number of hours you need to look your best and to do your most efficient work. The intellectual worker is all too apt to discount the importance of sleep as a factor in efficiency. Sleeplessness in the morning usually means that you are not getting enough rest.

If you sometimes need ten hours, take it. Many successful persons in all lines of work admit to getting this number of hours once or twice a week. They go to bed because they have the energy to go on.

If you have difficulty in sleeping, you may be getting insufficient rest. Sleeplessness is usually a result of too much mental activity and a lack of exercise, or from worry. Spend your weekends in the fresh air and take mild exercise for an hour daily to induce healthy sleep.

Sleep is essential to the renewal of energy in the body, particularly to the nervous system.

In the oil business, all purchases can and have been made at peak prices, and there must be a good level of unrealized profits—which is the case—before the market can be least anticipated to ease from sales when the money market hardens because of customer demand for loans. The golden rule of selling oil while the market is soft is to do it for a profit loss recently is hard to remember. # FARM Income OUTLOOK

MAY REACH 6-YEAR LEVEL

Chicago, Aug. 1 (A) With farm prices at their highest general level since 1930 as a result of the protracted drouth, many analysts today forecast that 1936 farm income might be the largest in years, barring further serious crop losses.

Farmers' income in the half of the year was $335,000 greater than a year ago, Government estimated. Then, the rise in prices of important agricultural commodities in some cases the same since war days — was believed by most observers to have more than offset the serious losses due to heat and late rain.

Traders cited the danger world scarcely as grain spurred upward in foreign and domestic markets. There was no sign of the drought reared in the already tattered 1976 U.S. western fur its

In effect the drought has swept the income of farmers' crops were destroyed and falling prices has given it to producers whose crops were caught.

The drought became a major influence about six weeks ago, when it was announced that the drought had been declared a national disaster. From June 15 to July 15 the Bureau of Agricultural Economics said farm prices had the greatest increase for a day period since August, 1930. At that time prices were lower than they are now, the general level of values, the bureau said, was the best since September, 1930.

During the past week, 1934 prices were established for soy ab, major in common wheat, hogs, corn, rye, oats, eggs, butter, potatoes, cheese and soy beans. Corn sold in sacks at the highest level 1939. Wheat was the best since 1933. Eggs and butter future the highest since 1930.

Roosevelt Cracks Down, Recovery Cracks Up

'Give Business a Chance,' Landon Urges

Good Wages and Lower Living Costs Blocked by Administration's Meddling, His View

One of the signs of the ending of past depression was the rearing of new business ventures.

Altogether, however, they provided work for many millions of people.

In the present depression the demand for work has not yet appeared.

Few new ventures have been started.

Why?

BECAUSE THE SMALL BUSINESS MAN, THE WORKING MAN WHO WOULD LIKE TO BECOME HIS OWN BOSS—THE AVERAGE AMERICAN—HAS HESITATED TO START OUT FOR HIMSELF.

HE LACKS CONFIDENCE IN THE SOUNDNESS OF FEDERAL POLICY. HE IS AFRAID OF WHAT MAY COME NEXT.

We must dispel his fear, restore his confidence and place our reliance once more in the initiative, intelligence and courage of these makers of jobs and opportunities.

That is why I say, in all earnestness, that the time has come to unshackle initiative and free the spirit of American enterprise.

We must be freed from incessant government limitation and host.

We must be freed from excessive expenditures and crippling taxation.

Once these things are done, the energies of the American economic system will remedy the ravages of depression and restore FULL ACTIVITY AND FULL EMPLOYMENT.

—From Governor Alfred M. Landon's Speech accepting the Republican Presidential nomination, Topeka, July 23, 1936

A Picture Record of Roosevelt's False Promises and Futile Performances

WOODROW WILSON

"Nothing hampers business like uncertainty. Nothing deters it or discourages it like the necessity to take chances, to run the risk of falling under the condemnation of the law before it can make sense just what the law is."

Roosevelt Tells Businessmen That Government Will Not Interfere with Their Freedom of Enterprise

"BREATHING SPELL,"

SEPT. 6, 1935

Why Business Needs and Hopes for a "BREATHING SPELL"

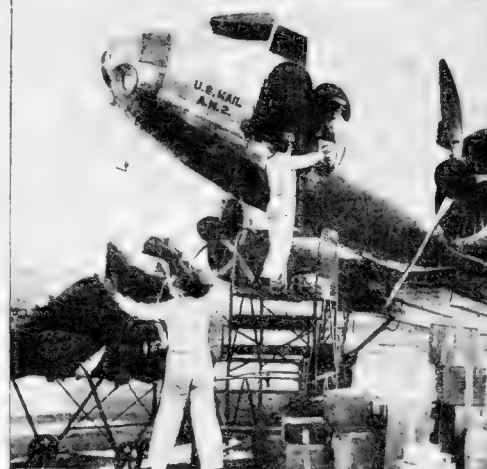

"Since 1932 the taxes of this corporation have increased from $2,347,819 to $4,619,575. We are now paying taxes which amount to more than $49 per month for every man and woman in our employ."

"If these taxes could be reduced by 25 per cent—as they would have been if the party in power had fulfilled the promises made in the party platform—we could add at least $12 a month to the average pay, or, in other words, we could add 21 cents a share to our annual dividend."

—From an article in Fortune, June, September, 1935, by the Chairman of the Board of a great American corporation.

THE GOVERNMENT TAKES

ON Feb. 9, 1934, the President, because of charges of "spoils" brought against the previous Administration, abruptly ordered the cancellation of commercial airmail contracts, turned the job of flying the airmail over to the gallant but unprepared and ill-equipped Army Air Corps. Col. Lindbergh, among others, bitterly protested this drastic, fatal move.

Had he let up on business PERMANENTLY, allowed it to make plans for the future, given it a chance to produce and expand, and to furnish more jobs, there would be little unemployment now.

There would be no necessity nor excuse for gigantic outlays for relief, to say nothing of wasteful boondoggling.

There would have been lower prices of food-stuffs, more money for each family to spend, more purchasing power in every dollar that the American worker earns.

Governor Landon thinks that when this dictatorial policy is reversed, "the energies of the American economic system will remedy the ravages of the depression and RESTORE FULL ACTIVITY AND FULL EMPLOYMENT."

A FLYER IN BUSINESS

A LITTLE more than a month after the order canceling airmail contracts, the President hastily took steps to return this business to the private enterprises which knew how to handle it. Before the Government's flyer in business ended, twelve Army flyers were killed and U. S. aviation had suffered the most serious blow to its prestige in history.

COLLYER'S SPORT OF KINGS COMMENT

By BERT L. COLLYER

BERLIN, Aug. 1 (INS)—I feel almost as if I had been adopted by the German people. They have been so darned nice to me I don't know exactly what to say.

Hero of Lad

AUSTEN LAKE

ONE IS MINDFUL OF THE STAGES through which Judge Emil Fuchs passed from the spring in 1923 when he picked up the Braves at pawn shop prices and proceeded to treat the players like people. There were some rowdy and boisterous types on the club in those days, but he sat them down at his dinner parties, invited them for house guests and let them levy freely on their next year's salaries.

POISONED BY GENEROSITY

MOST OWNERS HAVE NO ROMANTIC illusions toward their hired hands. But Yawkey maintains an easy fellowship, issuing the boys $500 for winter shooting on his Carolina estate, supplying them parcels of venison, bear meat and grouse, or taking the sunny hours away in cordial conversations. He is loath to one and all, undistinguishable from the company of his slaves and ready to frank his pokers for cigar or take a hand in their petty gambling games.

QUINN HAS SUCCESSFUL METHOD

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL OPERATORS in the baseball business are those who maintain a velvet-glove-over-muscle attitude and treat their players with indulgent but wary regard, like Bob Quinn of the current fleet, who regards ball players as so much athletic protegees, which, to be kept good, must be kept humble. He pays fees and the best terms and requires in turn the best they have in distance initiatives, with the unspoken threat that if he doesn't get what he wants he will cease paying or put something back to advance the deal.
